A SINGULAR DUEL.

Col. Henry P. Farrow, an attorney of Atlanta, recently challenged Judge Hood, editor of the Rome (Ga.) Commercial, for terming him "cowardly and pusillanimous." The Judge replied, saying that the article was written by an associate, then absent from Rome. Colonel Farrow rejoined that the chief editor was responsible, and must fight or retract. The latter published a retraction, which the Colonel declared was satisfactory. Mr. N. Nevin returned, and totally disapproved of his senior's course. He determined to reopen the quarrel, and he addressed Col. Farrow in a letter, in which he stated that he alone was responsible for the objectionable phrase, and concluded as "I have alreadyhad the small matter of three duels-in two of which I came off victorious, and in the third only lost a leg, and though withal I have no particular attachment to duelling, yet whenever a man persistently demanded a fight, I have always endeavored to accommodate him.

Permit me to say, in conclusion, my friend, that I think you are laboring under the delu sion that you have a character to lose.

Finally, if your voice is still for war, just bring along your implements, and the bee-hive for your left lower member. I scorn to take the advantage of any man. Yours, very easy,

M. A. Nevin, Associate Editor Rome Commercial." Colonel Farrow did not reply to this letter until several others from the same scource compelled him to answer it. He was a "mere employee." He deemed the chief editor the responsible person, and the chief editor had retracted. This was all he wanted. In addition

"I have been informed by those who have seen and know something of you, that from an unfortunate accident when quite a boy, you lost the use of your left leg; and from that day to this you have gone upon crutches.

For me to demand of you, in your crippled condition, that satisfaction which is due from one gentleman to another, would justly damn me forever. Think, sir, for a moment, of the overwhelming and merited infamy which would come down from an outraged people upon me, and upon my children after me, were in his line as cheap or cheaper than they can buy them farther North. sep 18—eo3m man." I recognize the "code," and were it not for your crippled condition you should not complain of being ignored. No, sir, no waiver on your part can enable you to stand before me a perfect man. And I say to you in the most positive, emphatic, and unqualified language, that under no circumstances, for no language which it is possible for one person to use towards another, could I be induced to commit so grave an error, to commit an act so violative of this "code," so revolting to true manhood, as to challenge to the field of honor one who is sustained between crutches.

Mr. Nevin at once replied to this (as he termed it) "lengthy and lachrymose epistle." He accused the Colonel of hypocrisy and evasion, and therefore proposed to close the correspondence. The Colonel rejoined that he objected to closing it. According to the "code" (fifth section, second division, first chapter, Wilson) Mr. Nevin's second must tender himself in his principal's stead.

It was Dr. Nevin's turn to rest a moment on his oars. In the next communication the following passage occurs:

"Your pretext is that I am a "cripple, and suspended between crutches." To one so conversant with the "code" as yourself, you must confess to such balderdash. Generals Hood and Ewell are both one-legged men, and each commanded a corps after their misfortune. Yet, under your construction of the "code, you could not and would not recognize these gentlemen as being within the pale of honor, because "suspended between crutches." These are the popular conclusion under the "code," as I understand it; and though you refuse positively, "under any circumstances whatever, to recognize me as principal," and though forced by your declarations, and my duty to my friend, Captain O'Conner, I withdraw in tavor of the latter: yet I do so under solemn protest against any such interpretation of the "code." the code. The unhapy second now appears in the scene in the following: ATLANTA, Ga., October 11, 1867-10:30 o' o'clock-Colonel H. P. FARROW-Sir:-As you have seen fit to adopt a strange subterfuge in order to avoid a meeting with my friend Mr. M. A. Nevin, and intimated a willingness to receive a challenge from me, I have authorized my friend, Colonel R. A. Alston, to make an arrangement for an immediate meeting.

Respectfully; THOMAS O' CONNER. Colonel Farrow accepted this challenge the same day, and proposed to fight the next mora-ing at sunrise. The result of this quarrel is thus stated by the Atlanta papers:

Captain Thomas O'Conner and Colonel H. P. Farrow met at sunrise on the 12th inst., on the east bank of the Savannah river, and exchanged shots. After the first fire the challenging party expressed themselves satisfied, and the friends of the party declared the matter satisfactorily and honorably adjusted. Captain O'Conner fired a little in advance of the word. On its announcement he promptly offered his antagonist another shot, which he refused to take advantage of.

An important decision has been rendered in the Kentucky Court of Appeals in the case of Watson et al., vs. Avery et al., on an appeal from the Chancellor's docree, establishing the principle that the Presbyterian Church property in Kentucky vests in the Louisville Presbytery, otherwise known as the "declaration and testimony party, comprising the and prescueders from the Presbyterian General Assembly of the United States.

At the Educational Convention at Nashville, Rev. Dr. Sears, agent of the Peabody fund, urged as a primary necessity the establishment of Normal Schools. He said the Peabody Fund would be used, not to endow colleges, but to aid persons to qualify themselves in schools already established for the profession of teaching.

Gents—The wonderful cures which have been made by your Poulterers' Friend cannot fail to aterest all who raise poultry. A gentleman of this village has been experimenting on chickens with the gapes. Since then I have had many calls for it, and it has been used extensively with the same result. It is of incalculable value to all who raise poultry. A. SPENCER.
